If anything, Lorrie Moore is far tougher than most people would suspect. It's simply that she has a feisty three-and-a-half-year-old son. "This particular parenting experience has been like a large nuclear bomb on the small village of my life," she says. The author of two novels and two short story collections, with a third,

Lorrie Moore - Wikipedia

The generations have always sized up one another in broad categorical descriptors. Though much current media attention is given to the millennial disdain for their elders (e.g., "OK, Boomer"), what millennials seem like to baby boomers (who are sometimes their parents) is often discussed more quietly. To generalize sweepingly, and in a way that is not contradicted by Rooney's work, some ...

Birds of America contains many of my favorite Lorrie Moore stories, including the one that I have actual holy feelings about, the harrowing and famous "People Like That Are the Only People Here: Canonical Babbling in Peed Onk." This is a story written from the deepest part of the soul; it sings with rage and despair, cuts you with its violent maternal love, and wears its wit like the pitch-black bravado of a man facing a firing squad.

Lorrie Moore Quotes (Author of Birds of America)

For my thesis colloquium course at Notre Dame this past fall, I read "People Like That Are the Only People Here," a short story by Lorrie Moore. Captivated by her wit, emotional power, nimble language and pithy social insight, I vowed to find more Moore. Finally — seven months, a complete thesis and one diploma later, I did.

People talking were meant to look at a face, the disastrous cupcake of it, the hide-and-seek of the heart dashing across. With a phone, you said words, but you never watched them go in. You saw them off at the airport but never knew whether there was anyone there to greet them when they got off the plane. " ... — Lorrie Moore, Like Life.
